Senior class looks forward to Senior Week events

LAUREN BENEDETTI

With only 27 days until graduation, seniors are counting down the final weeks of classes, which can only mean the beginning of Senior Week.

Senior Week, which kicks off on May 9, gives seniors an opportunity to participate in a variety of events the week before commencement at the PNC Arts Center.

“It is definitely important for every senior be involved with senior week,” said Senior Class President William Schwenck.

“These are the last couple of days college students and it should be spent with the people that have grown up with in these past four years.”

Senior Week tickets range anywhere from $5 to $42 for the week’s events. According to Schwenck, “Students are getting a deal with the ticket prices.”

Schwenck said the Student Government Association (SGA) deserves a lot of credit for the ticket-price reductions.

“The Student Government Association also helped lower the cost of events by giving us a budget earlier in the year,” said Schwenck.

Tickets for all events are now on sale, until Thursday, April 27 at the Office of the Student Activities on the second floor of the Rebecca Stafford Student Center. After April 27, tickets will go on sale for all other students interested in the events, provided that they are of drinking age (for certain events) and tickets are available.

Senior Week events begin at Bar A in Belmar. Students will spend time with friends, at the all-you-can-eat barbecue, and have the opportunity to use the shuttle bus leaving the Student Center parking lot.

A trip to New York City is planned on Wednesday, May 10 for students who will enjoy the sights and sounds of Broadway’s hit show the Producers.

Seniors then will get a chance to relax and eat with fellow classmates on Thursday, May 11 at the Red Fusion Bistro and Bar in Asbury Park.

On the morning of Friday, May 12, students can enjoy a two-hour lunch cruise around the “Big Apple.”

University’s Model UN class travels to the United Nations

JACQUELINE KOLOSKI

From Tuesday, April 11 to Saturday, April 15, 18 students from the Model UN class participated in the National Model United Nations Tournament in New York City.

“The purpose of the Model UN class is to introduce students to how the United Nations works while providing a real life experience as to how countries bargain, negotiate and resolve conflicts,” according to the Monmouth University website.

“The class is different from most courses on campus in that students assume leadership roles in the class,” said Professor Patten, Assistant Professor of Political Science.

The head delegate from Monmouth University were Farheen Haider and David Kratz.

Anthony Aulffo, a senior finance major, served as “a delegate for the economic commission for Africa.”

Monmouth University represented Mauritania which, according to Professor Patten, “is a developing country of three million people in West Africa.”

Monmouth University attempted to contact Google last week. However, Google never responded. It was then the University took it upon itself to remove the information that took place in October 2005.

According to Grey Dimmena, Vice President and General Counsel, Monmouth attempted to contact Google last week. However, Google never responded. It was then the University took it upon itself to remove the information “by fooling the system.”

One female undergraduate student, who asked to remain anonymous, said there is plenty of blame to go around.

“I was very upset that my information was not taken off Google sooner,” said the female undergraduate student. “It is very shocking that a multi-million dollar company like Google can’t pull something like that off sooner. I mean really, what does it take? The information

I like that SAB has an executive board that is very open to new ideas and encourages people to give their opinions about performers or trips because it gives the student body freedom to help decide some of the events they would like to see here.

Students compete in Model United Nations conference

Aulffo said that he believes that Monmouth did very well in the National Model United Nations conference. “We all got a sense of what it’s like to be a UN delegate,” he said and the complications that went along with it,” he explained.

“The students came to experience the world through the eyes of a Mauritanian.”

PROFESSOR PATTEN
Assistant Professor

Professor Patten said that this experience was transforming for the students because “the students came to experience the world through the eyes of a Mauritanian.” Aulffo said that he learned a lot participating in the conference. “I learned how hard it is to make changes to a country where if you were to view it the solutions seem somewhat superficial,” he said.

“My favorite part of the confer- ence was meeting people from all over the world and hearing about their lives and their different perspectives on the world.”

DEADLINE IS MAY 9, 2006

Dear Student:

On Sunday, April 30, 2006 from 12:00 PM to 6:00 PM the Student Government Association and Student Activities Board will present the annual program Springfest on the Great Lawn. The Springfest Committee has spent a great deal of time planning the events and activities that make up this year end celebration. The day will be filled with live music, carnival food, festival games, giveaways and a beer garden for students 21 and older. Springfest 2006 will have everything you need and it should be a great way for us all to celebrate the end of another year at Monmouth University.

While your attendance at Springfest is a key part of what continues to make this event so popular, it is also important that you remember to practice common sense and good decision making before, during and after the festival. It would be unfortunate for any student, or any guests close to final exams and Commencement, to make a poor decision that could impact his or her status as a member of the University community. I urge you to take a few moments to review the following guidelines that will in effect for Springfest 2006.

1. If you plan to attend Springfest 2006, you should know that open containers, squeeze bottles, bags, backpacks, and/or similar items will NOT BE PERMITTED. Any student that attempts to bring the above listed items to the event will be asked to leave the festival area.

2. Students living in any of the on-campus housing units are not permitted to host a social gathering during Springfest. Students that wish to hold a party after the festival must complete the Office of Residential Life’s Social Affairs Policy Application by Wednesday, April 26, 2006. The Office of Residential Life will review all party applications and then contact the apartments that have been approved by Friday April 28, 2006.

3. Parking in the Great Lawn and Garden Apartment Lots will be strictly enforced on April 30th. If you plan to drive to campus for the festival and do not have a valid parking sticker for the Garden or Great Lawn parking lots, you MUST park in the Commuter parking lot by the Student Center. NO EXCEPTIONS WILL BE MADE. Students should enter the campus from the Larchwood Avenue entrance.

For those students who live off campus, I would also remind you that the local communities have a zero tolerance for anyone that disrupts the quality of life in a given neighborhood. Should you decide to host a social gathering before, during or after Springfest, please make sure that it stays within the limits of common sense, respect for one’s neighbors and all applicable laws and ordinances within your community.

I hope that you will take an active role in assisting the Student Government Association, the Student Activities Board, the Office of Residential Life, and Monmouth University in our effort to present Springfest 2006 in a safe and positive manner. If you are willing to abide by the guidelines listed both in the Student Handbook and this letter, I feel confident that Springfest 2006 will be a positive expression of the achievements and hard work that you have made both in and out of the classroom this year.

I look forward to your anticipated cooperation and I hope to see you at Springfest. Best wishes on your final exams!

Sincerely,

Mary Anne Nagy
Vice President for Student Services

The customer is ALWAYS right

(A Server’s Apology)

The mantra is especially useful in the following situations: when reading the menu incorrectly, ordering the wrong item, having not eaten breakfast, being in a rush, and forgetting to tell someone that you don’t like your meal after you have already gobbled down the whole thing.

I have worked as a waitress at a popular family restaurant chain for four years, so I know the pain that all customers go through.

Let’s face it. It’s hard being a customer. The customer gets to sit and relax while a very underpaid, very underappreciated slave (excuse me, I mean employee) waits on their every beck and call.

There are many situations in which this get-out-of-jail-free card can be used to rescue the customer from being in such a horrible situation. There are many examples from my own experiences where I, the server, was there just to make the customers’ lives a living hell.

Servers, as you know, are the monsters in nightmares; the creatures that go bump in the night. We are ruthless, sick, twisted people. We want to ruin the customers’ days. We want to overcharge the customer. We want to make sure the customers starve (because we all know that if a customer has the money to eat out at a restaurant, their stomach must rumble like a Category 7 earthquake). To come clean, here is a report of some of my crimes:

The customers, a party of six people in their thirties, have been waiting a long time for their food. An overbearing five minutes. (How long does a steak take?) I apologized ten times and offered everyone free dessert, but I must have forgotten that I was in the presence of royalty, and I was but a lowly peasant. They left a penny on the table along with a laugh.

The customer is always right.

A mother was out with a group of four children. She couldn’t seem to control them. It was possible that if she touched one of her children, her Versace outfit and painted face may be tainted by a crayon, or worse, a smear from her child’s greasy hand. Her three-year-old son was throwing a tantrum. He was taking the sugar packets, salt, and pepper, and throwing it all over the table. The mother didn’t feel like dealing with it. In fact, she gave him the packets to be his babysitter. After all, I should have been there entertaining her kid, presenting a new dessert each time he yelped. Food was strewn across the table like the Staten Island garbage dump. She left it there.

The customer is always right.

I came over to take the order of a woman in her late 40s, at least I think. I couldn’t really make out her face, it was covered by a cell phone. She was talking about some very vital information. “Angelina Jolie is pregnant!” I tried to see if she was ready to order, but she didn’t respond. Twenty minutes had passed. She finally got off the phone. She scolded me for not coming over earlier. She had been waiting forty minutes to get her order taken. I should have used my psychic powers and realized she was ready to order.

The customer is always right.

I apologized to the above and other customers who have done the same, on behalf of all servers. For torturing you, for making you wait, for always making mistakes, for always putting our hair in your food, for making your food cold, for telling the cooks to take a long time. After all, we are not human. We are devoid of feelings. We do not understand you. We do not have a life. We are robots. We are the devil. We are nameless.

The customer is always right.

The customer is always right.

Two young mothers came in with their babies. I must be blind, because I missed this tiny speck of dust on the table. One of the women yelled at me to clean it better. I guess that made her happy because she rewarded me with a present. She left her baby’s dirty diaper on the floor.

The customer is always right.

I apologized to the above and other customers who have done the same, on behalf of all servers. For torturing you, for making you wait, for always making mistakes, for always putting our hair in your food, for making your food cold, for telling the cooks to take a long time. After all, we are not human. We are devoid of feelings. We do not understand you. We do not have a life. We are robots. We are the devil. We are nameless.

The customer is always right.

I must confess, however, to my most infamous crime. One time a family came in to eat: a husband, a wife, and their two young boys. I allowed pickles to be put on the side of their plates, even though they never said they didn’t like pickles.

A mother was out with a group of four children. She couldn’t seem to control them. It was possible that if she touched one of her children, her Versace outfit and painted face may be tainted by a crayon, or worse, a smear from her child’s greasy hand. Britney Spears is pregnant again, Jessica Simpson is inspiring, Ashton Kutcher is a Kabbalah nut, Stephanie Tanner is a meth-addict, Nick Lachey creates pedophile-free Internet.

Does this sound like last week’s headlines of all of your favorite magazines? Is your coffee table littered with magazines such as People, Star, The National Inquirer, or US Weekly? Do you have your TVs constantly taping E!, MTV, or VH1 so you will not miss a single moment of Nick and Jessica’s “painful divorce”? If this sounds like you, GET A LIFE.

In today’s society people have become so celebrity-obsessed that the line between their lives and Jessica Simpson’s has become very blurry. Men and women everywhere are feeling the embarrassment and pain of Jennifer Aniston and just know that Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie are responsible for Brad deciding to break Jen’s heart. What time does my son have baseball practice? Not important “Dancing with the Stars” is on and all I know is Jerry Rice better not two-step his way to the title, because Drew Lachey has better technique and he is just so dreamy.

What is the latest news with the United Arab Emirates trying to take over our ports and put us all in danger? Who knows! But I’ll tell you one thing: Lindsay Lohan really needs to get her weight under control, because I am really starting to worry about her. Weichert Realtor employee, says that she is often distracted from her work because she constantly wants to check the Internet for the latest celebrity gossip. “Celebrities’ lives are just so interesting, and when you are stuck behind a desk all day, your mind begins to wander. Celebrities are a great outlet to escape the monotony of every day life.” If you work because she constantly wants to check the Internet for the latest celebrity gossip. “Celebrities’ lives are just so interesting, and when you are stuck behind a desk all day, your mind begins to wander. Celebrities are a great outlet to escape the monotony of every day life.” When asked how often she reads tabloids such as People, she said, “I read People.com more than I read CNN.com, which is daily.” When asked why she did this, she stated, “The world is obsessed with fame and celebrities. Everywhere you look, there is a celebrity somewhere—whether it is on television, in magazines, or on a package of cookies in the supermarket. I am just trying to keep up.”

In addition, “one in four of the 700 respondents aged between 18 and 60 was so obsessed with their idol that it affected their daily life.” Celebrity obsession could also be one of the reasons for the “reality TV boom” that has taken place over the past ten years. People today are hoping to catch their big break and therefore are willing to humiliate themselves on national television on shows such as “Fear Factor” or “The Bachelor.” (Nothing demonstrates reality like 30 beautiful women doing anything and everything they can to win the heart of one man they have never met.)

This obsession with celebrities, especially in youths, may be more of a problem than most people think. According to BBCnews.com, “Young people who are obsessed with celebrities may have psychological problems... they may be lonely, insecure or lacking in social skills. They may also have a poor relationship with their parents.”

BBCnews.com states that children who are dangerously obsessed with celebrities are called “intense-personal celebrity worshipers.” They actually believe they have a personal relationship with the celebrity, and this could affect their relationships with others. Studies have shown that one in five children suffer from this syndrome. These children have problems in their personal life, so they use celebrities and their lives as an escape from their own.

Celebrity obsession is not only a problem with youth, however. A Monmouth University junior who only wanted to be referred to as Michelle said that she feels that celebrity worship is definitely a problem. When asked how often she reads tabloids such as Star or People, she said, “I read People.com more than I read CNN.com, which is daily.” When asked why she did this, she stated, “The world is obsessed with fame and celebrities. Everywhere you look, there is a celebrity somewhere—whether it is on television, in magazines, or on a package of cookies in the supermarket. I am just trying to keep up.”

Christine Capone, a former Lehigh University student and current Weichert Realtor employee, says that she is often distracted from her work because she constantly wants to check the Internet for the latest celebrity gossip. “Celebrities’ lives are just so interesting, and when you are stuck behind a desk all day, your mind begins to wander. Celebrities are a great outlet to escape the monotony of every day life.”

People everywhere are celebrity crazy. There is no set age, gender, or race. Celebrities are a main part of our lives, and are here to stay. With television, the Internet, and the recent trend of cell phone entertainment and iPods, the obsession with celebrities is bound to intensify.

ERIN LUCAS

While watching a television show with one of my best friends, a question was posed to us that got us both thinking. It went something like this.

"What is the best thing about the character of the show we are watching?"

To which my friend, with the character of the show we were pondering in mind, replied, "She can do anything she wants!"

It was a simple question, but the answer to it is not as simple as it seems. Although I see a great difference in the air that I think the government will give in the future, I still smell of smoke despite being around a smoking ban for some time. However, there are many opponents to this ban that have even taken the issue to court, determined to stop it. Do you think the ban will last?

"No, the smoking ban will not last because there will be fights going on outside state are smoke free. It's about time. Maybe I can enjoy my nights once you smell of it. I'm sick of trying to have a good time because they are concerned about health affects from second hand smoke. I don't see the point in having a good time because none of us are condemned to a smoke free state, as receive, from others compared to our friends and families. May be because we know at anytime it could be taken away from us without permission. Yet, constantly fighting something becomes tiring for most of us; hopefully, because we have moved forward to today, we found ourselves questioning, do we really have it all or not?

According to the show, if one has a great job, great friends and family, and a great relationship, they in turn should feel fulfilled, for they have it all. Being too much of an optimist sometimes I knew I just have to realize how much I appreciate everything that I have. Yet, I couldn't help but wonder, how many of us who really need, but don't realize it, and want more, instead of realizing how lucky we are.

To start, if you are going to college, there is a great chance that one day you will find a job that will make you successful, and if you're lucky, hire you. I know that some people who smoke have made it to the world, but always seem to have a cough or sore throat. I think about the friends I have who smoke. If it works in N.Y.C., L.A., and Ireland, it will work anywhere. I consider myself lucky to have found that every legitimate eco-system is involved in a serious relationship. I am grateful to have found an education and have very lucky we are.
President Bush’s Tax Cuts have been a constant source of controversy.

SEAN QUINN

Chiefs Justice John Marshall said, “That the power to tax is vested in the power to destroy may permit and render useless the power to create. Hence, it is as possible for those who would do conservatively, that taxes stifle growth and when there is no growth, there is no production, no maximization and everyone suffers.”

The Bush tax cuts of 2001 and 2003 have been a -uff to help the economy grow and should be made permanent. These cuts have helped to put us into an economic boom that is nearly unparalleled in American history. Unemployment will get worse, or you can let one of your employees go, which no one will notice or re- call about.

Naturally most business own- ers who do not need the tax cuts invested in their venture, are going to take the easiest path. They are going to go with the sa- fe and sure method of avoiding all levels of business and we hear on the news all too often that when a major corporation announces that sales are down, the next an- nouncement is typically a large lay off announcement.

Now let’s say that you are a small business owner and the Bush tax cuts are made perma- nent. You have more money at the end of each month and prof- it. As such, the tax cuts are used to defray the cost of the in- creased interest costs caused by the tax cuts already enacted. The increased interest costs caused by the tax cuts already enacted will total $165 billion by 2016. The Bush Administration has been focusing on how much these tax cuts have aided America during an economic tough patch. They claim these tax cuts have reinvigorated the economy. What they really mean is they are calling us into a hole. By increasing the deficit, the Bush administration will just be pass- ing his debts onto future genera- tions of Americans. The current ad- ministration is willy-nilly with tax cuts in the face of a nearly $30 billion deficit that seems to be growing at an alarming rate. Trying to fund both at the same time will do nothing but increase the deficit. The increased deficit is now free of the Bush tax cuts by 2016.”

The Bush administration has been running itself aground repeatedly over the last year or so, has been running itself aground. Kennedy had a similar system of cuts that boosted the economy, the do across the board. Kennedy would now say these cuts were responsi- ble for the property of the 80’s and 90’s.

History is on the side of wide spread tax cuts; whenever there are tried, people of all socioeconomic classes get to keep more of their paycheck and they get to keep more of their paycheck and they get to keep more of their paycheck and they get to keep more of their paycheck and they get to keep more of their paycheck.

The key to what is happening is the increase in the tax cuts; the government would have to keep more of their paycheck and they get to keep more of their paycheck and they get to keep more of their paycheck and they get to keep more of their paycheck and they get to keep more of their paycheck.

Some say that this will continue the current upward trend the Bush administration has already risen by several trillion dollars under the mismanagement of George W. Bush's administra- tion. According to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, CBPP, “because these tax cuts have not provided the promised benefits, also are generating substantial increases in the national debt. The additional debt now being built up will persist even if the tax cuts are allowed to expire on schedule. As a consequence, the increased interest costs caused by the tax cuts already enacted will total $165 billion by 2016.”

Washington University sees covert acts of kindness

KATIA KUDAR
KRT ARCHIVES

First, giant signs appeared on Washington University’s campus, each with a cryptic message or question, such as “Wake up!” or “What will you change?” or “Can you feel it?”

The next week, boxes filled with toys beach balls, soccer balls, Frisbees materialized in various locations. Some of the signs were changed to read: “Play nicely” and “Pass it on.”

Then last week, two horse-drawn carriages showed up unannounced outside residence halls to give students free rides to class. There was no explanation, just signs on each carriage that read, “It’s your turn.”

Among the signs that week: “Where are you going?” and “Get back on your horse.”

Some apathetic college students haven’t noticed all of these strange signs and happenings around campus and don’t really care. But many Washington U. students have been murmuring to each other, wondering about the identity of the anonymous benefactors behind the “Your Turn” campaign who are trying to jump-start a chain reaction of kindness.

“I think it’s a really cool idea,” said Lauren Jaffe, a freshman from Columbus, Ohio, as she sat outside the library on a warm, breezy day.

“It reminds me of that movie…” said Lisa Podlecki of Long Branch, as she looked to Jaffe for help. Her eyes lit up, and she blurted out, “Pay It Forward!”

At first, Jaffe said she thought students must be behind it. But she wasn’t so sure when the carriages arrived, figuring instead that it must be somebody with lots of money.

But Podlecki pointed out that the whole enterprise seems very “college-y” with its idealistic aspirations.

“I think it’s cool they aren’t taking any recognition for it,” Jaffe said.

“Yes, if you do it for recognition, it’s not random and kind,” Podlecki said.

“It just makes it more…” Jaffe agreed.

Another part of the “Your Turn” campaign is to get students, faculty and staff to write anonymous notes to the people who have made a difference in their lives. When people send those notes to a certain e-mail address, the secret do-gooders will send those notes along to the recipients through campus mail. The letters encourage the recipients to spread the love by writing similar notes to others. It should be noted that it’s rare for students to receive letters in their campus mailboxes. So the “Your Turn” folks use e-mail to remind e-mail-addicted students to check their mailboxes.

Jill Carnaghi, assistant vice chancellor of students, said she received the “nicest anonymous letter” thanking her for her work.

“I’ve carried it around for days,” she said, adding that she has written down a list of people she plans to write notes to in return.

Carnaghi also disclosed that she knows the identity of some of the people involved in the “Your Turn” campaign but has promised to keep their anonymity.

“I think they really are sincere about just focusing on the content and not who are the individuals involved in it, or what are their affiliations, and is there an ulterior motive,” she said.

An Insider’s look into the Samuel Beckett Festival

As the Samuel Beckett Festival came and went in the month of March, so did the many festivities in Red Bank and at Monmouth University. While a handful of literature professors had their students read Beckett’s Waiting For Godot, they also had them attend the performance of the Beckett work at Red Bank’s Two River Theatre. The Two River Theatre also housed another set of Beckett’s short plays. Kelly Gahm, Erica Osterlo, Alicia Ahlum, Jessica Henig, and Angela Swercheck, all Monmouth University students, had the chance to perform in Samuel Beckett’s short play, entitled The Quad. Pure motion, abstract paths and music, and bold colors made the piece enchanting, as well as questionable in regard to the abstract routes each performer took. A chance to take a brief look at The Quad and get a short history of the play can be found online at: http://www.medienkunstnetz.de/works/quadra/video/1. Talk backs after each set of plays offered deeper insight into the mind of Samuel Beckett, and his purposeful intentions in his works. All of the girls that participated in The Quad found the experience to be very rewarding and very different from their usual performance routines.

Me and My Gang also features ballads that simply take you away and almost puts you in the exact place in which they are singing about. The song "Cool Thing" does just that. The song is about two people who meet while on vacation, and they end up falling in love. "Cool Thing" is easily the best song on the album lyrically. You can't help but escape in the story that the song is telling.

"Stand" is the opening track on the album and is an inspirational song about being able to regain strength in Conley on In Reverie will be pleasantly surprised at his performance on Sound the Alarm.

Why Aren’t They On TV?

BILL STECH

Some people watch too much TV. Then there are those of us who made sure we scheduled our classes around the ABC Family afternoon comedy block so we could catch Boy Meets World and Full House everyday. But what about the shows from our youth that are not being treated royally in syndication, even though Family Matters is? Here are some of those shows that we miss oh so dearly, and never to enjoy between classes.

Kevin Arnold, Paul Pfeifer, Winnie Cooper, and of course Wayne. Yes, The Wonder Years was one of the greatest shows of the late 80s and early 90s. It encapsulated the turmoil of the 1980s through the eyes of a high school student. I remember every Sunday watching it with my parents. It was a show we all could enjoy, even though as a seven year old I didn’t get most of the music and drug references. That is only one reason why it should be on TV again! Please, if it will not be syndicated, let The Wonder Years be released on DVD.

Another late 80s Sunday night favorite was everyone’s favorite smart aleck alien Alf. Who cares how he got here or knew English, but I remember eating a lot of that Food of the Gods. Alf has had some strange programming, like the classic Canadian-bred You Can’t Do That On Television. There were so many classic skits, like the kids coming out of their lockers to say random jokes, the “introduction to the opposition,” and the drunk bus driver who would always crash.

What about Where in the World Is Carmen San Diego? Not only were you entertained, you learned something. I didn’t watch it, but I heard the Disney Afternoon was quite entertaining. Duck Tales, Goof Troop, TaleSpin, it was all good.

The best, I hear, had to be Chip n Dale’s Rescue Rangers. It’s not really from our youth, but I personally miss those black and white cartoons from the 1930s. For no particular reason, there would be a cow dancing with some really happy music playing in the background.

How can we find that on TV? It’s very frustrating. Please write your congressman.

BAM! A Visit To Emerils

Does the name Doc Gibbs sound familiar? How about the words kick it up a notch? Ok, what about BAM? Well if none of these words ring a bell then you are definitely not familiar with the show Emeril Live. Last week I was fortunate enough to go to a taping of the show and it was definitely a cool experience.

I went with my mother and we drove into New York City to the Chelsea Market Place. I have never seen so many food places in my life. When we got to where the show tapes, the assistants of Emeril took us up to the VIP room, and we really felt important. We sat there for a while and they gave us food and drinks until they were ready for us to come into the studio.

We finally went into the studio and my mom and I were not sure where we were sitting, thinking we would sit in the audience we started to walk that way. The lady in charge of the seating said “you two, right this way.” She lead us to our seats at the tables right by where Emeril cooks, we were so excited. We sat down right next to “Doc” Gibbs and the Emeril Live Band, they were so talented!

The show started and Emeril jogged out to the center of the studio, he talked about what he was going to cook then they went to each commercial. He had put on his apron and did it while standing right next to me! He smiled at me and said, “Enjoy the show.” I was in shock. Not that he is a major celebrity, but I am a pretty big fan.

The whole show was about turkey. Turkey chili, turkey stew, everything turkey. Everything he made was passed to everyone we didn’t know, but the food was so good, we got used to it real fast.

Although it is called Emeril Live, it was not on that day. It is taped in front of a live audience and our episode won’t be aired for a little while.

If you are a fan of the show, or even just a fan of cooking, this is such a cool experience. If you are not lucky enough to get tickets to the show, because it is a lottery, just take a trip to Chelsea Market Place anyway. There is such a variety of foods and sweets that everyone can enjoy. But don’t take my word for it. Summer is here, take a car, take a train, go to the Market Place and have a great experience.

Like the three previous Scary Movie films, Scary Movie 4 is a very funny movie - as long as you see the films they were spoofing.

The two main films you should see in order to understand most of the jokes were The Grudge and War of the Worlds. Anna Faris does an excellent job portraying Sarah Michelle Geller’s character in The Grudge. Even the set looked like an exact replica of the one used in the actual film. However, I doubt it was the same one considering The Grudge was filmed entirely in Tokyo.

In the film, Cindy (Faris) nurses an old woman who lives in a home haunted by a small Japanese boy, and tries to figure out who killed him. Meanwhile, next door lives Tom (Craig Bierko), who portrays Tom Cruise’s character in War of the Worlds.

Tom is a divorced father who has to take care of his two kids for a little while. While he is taking care of them, aliens start to move in town and they all have to try to survive. During all of this, he and Cindy realize they like each other and want to be together, but can’t since they have to escape all of the aliens.

The other two movies they spoof are The Village and Saw 2. These two movies are not as heavily spoofed as the previous two. While Cindy escapes her town, she finds her friend Brenda (Regina Hall), and the two of them stumble upon a small town in the woods, which is “the village.” They are there for a short while before ending up in a cell like in Saw 2.

There are a few surprises in this that made it even funnier, including a cameo appearance by an actor in one of the spoofed films.

If you have time, go see the movie in theatres. If not, it wait until video.

where leaders look forward

West Long Branch, New Jersey 07764-1998

Change. There are thousands of times we have written about altering people’s advice on how to deal with different types and degrees of change in their life. While how to speak four different languages and how to play three different instruments in these last five years? Does this make him more successful in your eyes? Even though he hasn’t really done anything truly exciting? Most likely.

Why is that? Perhaps it isn’t necessarily the excitement of change, as much as the growth. You can either grow by learning something new, or grow by overcoming a fear ignited by the change. Is that why the man was deemed unsuccessful at first? Not because life wasn’t exciting, but because if nothing had changed, he hadn’t grown or learned anything new? Is that why people have a midlife crisis? Because they feel as if nothing in their life has changed or will change?

Additionally, it should probably be pointed out, that this change and success does not simply have to do with careers and knowledge. There are two girls who live near me that I used to work with when I was in high school. They are a couple of years older than me and still work at the same place. Yes, their responsibilities have increased a bit, but they are basically doing the same thing that they did when I was there, four years ago. At first glance, they might not be deemed successful. However, both girls got engaged last year and will be married by the end of this year > change and success. Although they have not been overly successful in their careers, most people would declare them very successful in their personal lives.

Is this another reason why people suffer from boredom later in life and why your young years are deemed the best of your life? Right now, most of us are not married. Thus, we are not only seeking jobs and growing in that respect, but we are directly or indirectly seeking a partner and constantly growing in our personal relationships. We are always learning, always growing, and always changing, thus success can be found much more easily. As you get older and settle down with a partner and a job, life stops changing as much, does that really make success harder to find? Or do you just have to look for different achievements?

Overseas Correspondent Bob Danhardt takes us on his vacation to Greece:

Now that we have settled in the Sydney area, the girls and I have started to find and see this amazing country!

My first trip was to the Blue Mountains with three other Monmouth girls. From a distance the mountains actually have a blue tint. They are known for the Three Sisters, which is a beautiful rock formation with three points. Aboriginal Australians have a story behind them about three sisters who fell in love with three brothers. By law they were not allowed to marry, and there was a big battle over the whole situation. Apparently the three rocks stand there as a reminder for future generations of the struggle that was talked at 3,500 feet according to the Blue Mountains website. We hiked over these huge rocks the first day. The stairs were rather steep and slippery; those of us who were not so mobile were quite taken back when they saw what they were getting themselves into. I thought it added to the experience of being able to see what they were getting themselves into. I thought (as is the case with most experiences) it is not a disappointment.

The other sites I saw included the Australian Grand Canyon. It was probably the most gorgeous sight I have ever seen so far in Australia. There were many caves and waterfalls, and plenty exotic Australian plants and trees. After about three hours, mostly uphill, we reached the top. The lengthy, exhausting hike was absolutely worth it. Once we all saw the view of the Blue Mountains. This was a really difficult trip and I am glad we spontaneously went off. For only $130 Australian, which is about $100 US dollars, we were able to see and meet a great people and were able to see an amazing part of Australia.

The second trip that we went on was to Melbourne with everyone from Monmouth. Our advisors, Jarrod, Tim, and Wally took us.

Our flight was incredibly early on Saturday morning, but anything after the twenty four hours of flying from New York is a piece of cake. Not only about how we were landed, Everyone was unprepared for the weather, as it was about ten to twenty degrees colder than Sydney. The advisors rented cars for us and on the first part of the trip we traveled through the state of Victoria and saw all of the attractions like the Great Ocean Road, and the Twelve Apostles rocks. Running along side the beach, the Great Ocean Road is approximately two hundred and fifty miles long and very curvy. Unlike the Jersey shore, there are no houses on the beach or any homes secluded, added to its beauty. Also, I saw my first koala bear! From there we saw the Twelve Apostles, which are limestone formations right along The Great Ocean Road. Now only about eight stand, but it is still something everyone who travels to Australia should see. The following morning we went to the other big Australian city of Melbourne. By coincidence, the weekend we were there was the same weekend that Melbourne was hosting the Formula One Race Car event. When I clocked over the time I have seen so far in Australia. It is a really interesting city, one that I think you also need to do to make any trip to Greece complete; visit an island that Greece has tons of islands, with varying distances. My last day there was the island of Skiathos. It was one of the most beautiful places I had ever seen. When I got the island I rented a motor scooter and cruised it for hours. I recommend this if you are looking to see the most you can in a day. It was through this experience that reaffirmed the fact of how lucky I am to be here.

Alpenhorn: The actual name for the accordion

Fact: Although Switzerland is a very independent country, it does not have its own language. Most use a type of Swiss-German. However, French, Italian and most second most popular languages are also used. Interlaken Switzerland... I’m sure few of you have heard of it. It is one of the most beautiful places I have ever seen. For Interlaken is an appropriately named town that is nestled in the Swiss Alps between two lakes. However, it is neither its picturesque views nor quaint relaxing atmosphere that draws people to it. No. Interlaken is the extreme sports adventurer’s utopia. It is considered one of the best places in the world for extreme sports. It offers everything from alpine skiing to hang gliding and everything in between. I am certain a number of sports many have never even heard of (ti Zorbing- strap you inside this barrel type thing and roll you down a mountain!)...

It was for this reason that I wanted to come here. I originally wanted to go hang gliding but they don’t officially begin offering until May. So, I instead decided to go paragliding. The reason is when you strap you to a chair-like seat, the pilot and a parachute and then you literally run off the side of a mountain. This is exactly what we did! The views from up from the air (approximately 3000 ft above the ground) were amazing. The thing to keep in mind this whole time is that we were in the Swiss Alps! The town below was a lush green and the lakes were as if they were dyed blue. The thermals (wind patterns) running through the mountain allowed the pilot to enjoy the up in the air. The ride could last all day if the conditions are right, but of course this is a paid thing and like any attraction it has a time limit. The great part is that you descend all the way to the ground that you were looking down on. If you are lucky you’re pilot will do some tricks for you. They will use what they think is the best place to watch and most certainly the most g-force I have ever felt). This was the only thing we had planned to do when we were allowed onto the track (in addition to seeing some secret! If you’re ever looking for got there that is not how it stayed! The afternoon we arrived we also signed up for something called canyon jumping. This is when they basically attach you to a rope, you jump off a canyon and free fall until the rope catches you. We were all really pumped (and nervous!) for this. Unfortunately, there were not enough people signed up to do it with us and we got chickens, so that got cancelled.

To fill our time that would have otherwise been the biggest butter we would have ever got in our lives, we decided to take the money we had been refunded and rent fun cars and motor scooters to drive along the Great Ocean Road for a couple of hours. It was a really cool experience. We drove all over the place. The mountains here are the biggest I have ever seen and the weird thing is how high you can actually drive. The only thing I would have done differently is as if we were getting any closer to the top.

Interlaken is just a beautiful quiet little place that hiding a huge mountain! So if you’re ever looking for adventure it is the place to go! Be careful though, these big adventure come at hefty prices.

Social Security outbreak

would never have been on the Web if not for the school. On the other hand, the question I now ask is, why did Google republish it?”

According to Dimenna, Google is responsible for putting the cached item back on their site despite the university’s request to remove students’ information back in October 2005. As an additional security precaution, the University had also removed the server in question from the Internet back in October 2005.

Google, who was contacted for further comment, failed to respond to Dimenna’s comments by press time. However, Google did e-mail The Outlook last Thursday when the information was first discovered.

“If the information was removed from the school’s Web site then it should no longer appear in Google search results, our results are only a reflection of the Web itself,” said Nathan Tyler, a member of Google’s Public Relations Department. “If the Webmaster at your school asks us to remove this information we would do so - we also have an automated tool they can use to remove the information themselves.”

Dimenna says Google’s claims are “not true.” According to Dimenna, Tyler and Google failed to mention that if you ask for something to be removed from the Web and then you proceed to remove the server containing that information from the Internet, a common action from a security point of view, after six months the information is going to be permanently if you want to take action.

“They have not been paranoid that I could use this computer to remove this information,” Dimenna said. “I feel very confident that as a result of this experience and the lessons we have learned from it, as well as the other steps that we have taken in terms of adjusting our system to limit Google’s access to it, that the likelihood of an inappropriate release of information in the future is substantially diminished,” said Dimenna.

Notwithstanding, Dimenna said he believes it is unlikely something like this will happen again.

“I feel very confident that as a result of this experience and the lessons we have learned from it, as well as the other steps that we have taken in terms of adjusting our system to limit Google’s access to it, that the likelihood of an inappropriate release of information in the future is substantially diminished,” said Dimenna.

According to Dimenna, Google’s system is looking for one message for six months and returned the cache containing the information to the Internet.

In order to resolve the problem, the staff made changes to the campus wide firewall to allow access to the web server that once held the social security numbers and turned the server on again, without the social security information present, allowing Google to have its crawl send back a message that the pages in question were removed and this would be permanently deleted from Google’s cache.

----- Grey Dimmena

How the S.S. number outbreak happened:
(Monmouth University’s explanation)

“The technical staff was able to determine the following: Google has a system whereby they “crawl” Web sites frequently looking for new pages and removed pages in order to keep their system up to date. Their system is looking for one of two possible messages: either a particular page is a new page and is thus added to their system or a page is not found in which case the old page that is not found is removed from their system. If the server is inaccessible they take no action either way because they get no message back. Once something being removed, if after six months there is no message from a crawl notifying Google that the page was not found, the information is automatically repated to the Internet by Google. Since the University had removed the server from the Internet, the Google crawl received no message for six months and returned the cache containing the information to the Internet.

Top 10 ways to get yourself prepared for the warm weather

1 Tan
For a nice base tan before you put on your bathing suit for the first time this season, try Coppertone’s Endless Summer Gradual Tan. This self tanner not only gives you some color but also moisturizes at the same time. Don’t worry about turning that nasty shade of orange because this tanner only bronzes and even smells great too. Results can be seen in as soon as two days. Only $4.99 at Walgreens.

2 Get a Pedicure
One of the first things you must do before wearing those new open-toed sandals is get a pedicure. Not many people find feet attractive as it is, so don’t let your pale, calous-ridden tootsie’s scare them away. The first pedicure of the season should be professionally done and then if you’d like to save some cash here and there throughout the summer do your own pedicure on occasion. Light colors are better in the summer on your toes so stay away from deep red and browns. Light colors will make you appear tanner, as well. An average pedicure will run you about $18-$25 not including a tip.

3 Tone Up
If you’re completely against the idea of pumping iron but want to tone your muscles for that sexy two-piece then look no further. Yoga and Pilates are great workouts that strengthen not only your body, but also your mind. With either of these workouts you can increase your flexibility and exercise different tendons and ligaments of your body, all while in a zen state of mind. Most venues allow you to ‘drop-in’ for a class which could only cost $15-$20. Aside from your body, you’ll tone down your stress levels and detoxify your body from the previous night’s festivities.

4 Purchase the Right Shades
Sunglasses are known more for being more of a stylish accessory rather than a source of protection from harmful ultraviolet radiation rays. Of course you should check out sun but it’s important to realize that the FDA actually recommends sunglasses that block 99-100% of the UVA and UVB rays. Today’s trend of oversized sunglasses are actually perfect for protecting your eyes because the more coverage of your eye the less likely you’re damaging your eyes.

5 Wax
Being silky smooth in your bathing suit is a must if you don’t want to feel uncomfortable when catching some rays. Waxing is a good way to rid yourself of the annoyance of shaving every other day. Just like advised with the pedicures, it’s better to get your first waxing of summer done professionally and then tidy up on your own afterwards. Hair removal kits can be purchased at any local pharmacy and come in the form of depilatories creams, gels or wax. Try Sally Hansen’s Lavender Spa Wax Hair Removal Kit for $5.99 at Walgreens.

6 Moisturize
To get a healthy glow and tan quicker try moisturizing twice a day. After you get out of the shower in the morning and then before you go to sleep apply some body lotion to quench your skin. In the summer, put your moisturizer in the refrigerator to keep it cool, this way it will feel good against your skin when you apply it and will also firm your skin a bit. For extreme moisture try Johnson & Johnson’s Softlotion 24-Hour Moisture for $5.99.

7 Buy Swimwear
A good bathing suit will make your beach experience flawless. If you feel comfortable in what you’re wearing it will show. If you’re at all self conscious about the suit then don’t buy it because your uneasiness will show. If you have a large chest then try a halter top that will give you support. If you’re short and want to elongate your legs to look slimmer then try a bottom that has a high cut or even better, ties at the sides.

8 Get Sunscreen
Over the past few years it’s become evident that sunscreen and sunblock are essential to our health when we’re outside. If you plan on swimming then waterproof sunscreen will last up to eighty minutes. It’s best to put on your lotion before you go into the sun to let it soak in. Having a base tan does not relinquish you from your duty of lathering up since a base tan is only equivalent to an SPF of two or three. If your skin is light use 8-12 SPF; if it’s medium use 4-8 SPF and if it’s dark it’s recommended to use 2-4 SPF.

9 Highlight your summer
The epitome of summer involves a bronzed, why not be one yourself. To get lighter during the rally and profession-hair foilied then go for that will have others blonde. After you get protect them while wearing a hat, then before you go out. If highlights then they even turn a brassy color for most men usually blonde bombshell, so self? Highlights usually summertime, both naturally. If you’re getting your a creamy looking highlight thinking you’re a natural those highlights you should sunbathing. If you’re not up apply leave-in conditioner you don’t protect your new will fade faster and could color.

10 Summerize Your Accessories
For the warm weather when less is more, let your ac cessories do the talking. Metallics and cool colors are very ‘in’ this season. Shell necklaces and earrings are also a hit. Large, long necklaces are still in style from the winter, but go for lighter weights. Large pendants of jade or other stone on beaded necklaces will be the ‘bling’ of the summer and highlight a plunging neckline. Bags are still oversized and in fun, outrageous colors.

After a tough weekend of golf, the Monmouth University men’s golf team was ready to take on the prestigious Coastal Valley, Pennsylvania to compete in the Lafayette Invitational to try and right the wrongs of the previous outing. The rain shortened events and the Hawks finish in ninth place out of the 20-team field. Coach Dennis Shea noted that the team needed to play much better in order to be competitive.

“We haven’t played as well as we had hoped so we need to focus on the next few matches to see if we can improve,” said Shea.

The focus for sophomore Anthony Campanile and Dave Marshall as Campanile, after an unusual opening round of 85 last week followed by a solid round of 75, fired a four over par 76. Marshall tied Campanile for the weekend low score for the Hawks as he hopes to see the football sene-
tive pro football player.

A Hawk destined to fly

With a little less than three weeks until the NFL draft, Miles Austin, who eats and sleeps training, managed to answer a few questions for The Outlook to tell us what’s like to be a prospective pro football player.

Finishing his college career as Monmouth’s leader in every receiving category, with 154 receptions, 2,867 yards and 13 touchdowns, Austin and his teammates Miles Austin and Hawk’s fans hope to see the football sentive pro football player.
That is, of course, if he is.

As the semester comes to an end Austin prepares to graduate in May and with hopes of making the cut will start training alongside professionals after he finds out where his future will take him.

When asked what his fondest memory of playing for Monmouth was, Austin replied, “winning two championships and having very prosperous career.”

SURF REPORT
CARD

The surf is looking to be small but clean for the early part of this week, and therefore worth it if you’re willing. That is, of course, though the waves won’t be in the shorebreak category this week.
so the beach has to offer. It is easy to see why many choose to enjoying the remainder of the week.

While the first two events of the spring haven’t been all that great for the Hawks, there are still two events remaining before the NEC tournament. Knowing this team and its coach, two weeks is more than enough time to get a talented group of golfers back on the right track.

Through the waves we won’t be in the shorebreak category this week, the sunny days will still be there to bring out the best looking scenery, and its coach, two weeks is more than enough time to get a talented group of golfers back on the right track.

“The most important shot in golf is your next one. “One bad shot doesn’t make or break you. You have to move onto the next shot, forget about the last one, and go from there. If you can do that, then you’ll be alright.”

DENNIS SHEA
Head Golf Coach

The Neptune Shoreline early morning is perfect for a catch some waves before the surf seasons kicks into full gear.
